

It is my view that Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law has worked well. Prior to the law, I used to receive between 12 and 15 calls per week. Now, I can't even remember the last time our household has been interrupted by telemarketers. I know that there have been only 2 or 3 calls since we put our names on the Indiana Attorney General's list.

I strongly feel that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law protections. They seem to be working extremely well.
